"It is reported through many chains of transmission from 'Umar b. al-Khattab, Abu Hurayra, Salama b. Akwa', Abu 'Amrat al-Ansari and others that on one expedition, the army went hungry. They referred themselves to the Noble Prophet, and he told them: "Gather whatever food is left in your saddle-bags". Everyone brought a few pieces of dates and put them on a mat. The most they could put together was four handfuls. Salama related: "I estimated it amounted to the size of a sitting goat". Then the Noble Messenger announced: "Everyone bring his dish!" They pressed forward, and no one in the whole army remained with an empty dish, all the dishes were filled. There was even some left over. One of the companions later said: "I realized from the way that increase was obtained that if the whole world had come, the food still would have been sufficient." " - B. Said Nursi

"A child who was not young but was mute came to the Noble Messenger. He asked the child: "Who am I?" The child, who had been mute from birth, replied: "You are the Messenger of God", and started to speak." - B. Said Nursi

"Imam Jalil b. Wahab also reports: "During that same battle, Hubayb b. Yasaf was struck on the shoulder with a sword so that he received a grievous wound with part of it almost severed. The Noble Messenger joined the arm and shoulder back together again and breathed on it, and it was healed." " - B. Said Nursi

Book: Islam, the West, and the Risale-i Nur - by Meryem Weld (Sukran Vahide)

The author's story of Islam, the West and the Risale-i Nur beautifully explains the importance of the Risale-i Nur for contemporary man in relation to the myriad aspects of the Western World and Islam. Here is an excerpt from the book:

"It is difficult to express the feelings of joy, relief, and excitement that I experienced as the truth about this life began to emerge on studying the Risale-i Nur. We joined Bediuzzaman on his journeys around the universe and found all beings to be engaged in numerous important duties, everything was linked to everything else. It was one mighty unified system of mutual support and assistance demonstrating through its total order, wisdom, and purpose that it was being continuously created by a single All-Powerful and Knowing Creator." - Meryem Weld (Sukran Vahide)

"I found that the Risale-i Nur not only addressed and satisfied my intellect, but also, as the layers of dirt of unbelief were peeled away, it addressed my heart and inner senses. While in the past these had rejected whatever I had approached seeking for answers, they now responded yielding nothing but peace of mind and contentment. Before, my life had been a journey descending into deeper and deeper darkness, marked only by unhappiness, loneliness, and despair, but now I saw that myself, and all human beings, have been equipped for a journey that not only leads to eternal happiness, but also results in happiness in this world. I saw that on this journey we merely have to use the equipment we have been given to conform to the perfect order, wisdom, and purpose that is so apparent in the world outside ourselves and to join all our brother creatures in the worship and glorification of our All-Wise and Compassionate Creator. How the journey should be conducted is all contained within the religion of Islam, the necessities are all provided, and Bediuzzaman has given us a perfect guide in the Risale-i Nur." - Maryem Weld (Sukran Vahide)
